SMITH & COWLEY, Principals, PITTSBURGH, Pa. jan19:ly.

Professors BUCHANAN & DOWD of the American University, are making wonderful cures of Cancers, Tumors and Ulcers by their new discovery, a painless treatment, no knife, no plasters, no caustic burning. The most remarkable feature of this treatment is, it separates the chemical elements of cancerous growths, so that they shrivel, die and disappear and will not return. All those afflicted can call on the Professors Buchanan & Dowd, University; or address, No. 514 Pine Street, Philada. augl7:ly ARTIFICIAL TEETH PERFECTED!—T. J. & H. J. CHANDLER have purchased the exclusive right of Beaver county to use Dr. Stack's Patent by which they can put in Artificial Teeth as this is Gold Plate, with a beautiful tempered polish; and so light and elastic as to perfectly fit the mouth; absorbing all that slimey and bilty condition, so much complained of heretofore; and lessening the bulkiness to a great degree. It is used, no two teeth, it would be willing to wear the old style plate any longer than they could conveniently get them extracted. All branches of dentistry performed in the best and most scientific manner. In filling teeth with gold, etc., we challenge competition from any quarter, and can refer to living subjects whose fillings have stood between thirty and forty years. Among the number Hon. John Allison will exhibit fillings we inserted some 28 years ago; the teeth as perfect as the day they were filled. Laughing Gas prepared on on a new plan, freeing it from all unpleasant and dangerous effects, making the extraction of teeth a matter of pleasure rather than of horror and pain. Prices as low as any good dentist in the State. Office at Beaver Station, Rochester Pa.

CHAS. B. MURRY, Notary Public, Conveyancer and Insurance Agent, Deeds and Agreements filled up at reasonable charges taken, &c. Having only commenced as Agent for several first class Insurance Companies, representing the Fire, Life, Accident and Live Stock Departments, he proposed to take risks and write policies on the most liberal terms. Also, agent for the "Anchor Line" of first class Ocean Steamships, which sail as good time, and passage as low as any other line. Office in Lee's brick row, Diamond, Rochester.

MRS. THOMPSON'S WHITE-WARE.

Mrs. Thompson stood by the kitchen table paring potatoes for dinner. Something was evidently wrong with the little lady, for there was an unmistakable air of "spice" in the way she tossed the potatoes into the pan of cool spring water, waiting there to receive them. It was sultry weather, and through the open window came the sound of mowers whetting their scythes, blended with the call of the robin and the faint, pleasant notes of the cuckoo in the shaded wood.—But it only irritated Mrs. Thompson; indeed, everything irritated her that day. Looking out [illegible] door [illegible] she saw [illegible] with broad reaches of meadow land, fringed with graceful belts of birch; and softly rounded mountains lifting their velvety foreheads to the white, fleecy clouds that went sailing slowly across the exquisite ether, like huge drifts of thistle-down. But this also irritated her. Everything could be beautiful save her life, and that was cold, and rude, and barren. At least Mrs. Thompson, in the plenitude of her present unsatisfactory mood, was telling herself that it was.

To begin at the beginning: Jane Lawrence had been an unusually romantic girl, and had gone to a boarding-school for two years. She had always fancied that she would marry some famous artist or scholar, who would take her to Rome and Venice, where she might live in a perpetual dream of beauty. She so loved beautiful things! Perhaps all women do; and that may be the reason so many are found ready to barter love for gold.

But contrary to all her pre-conceived notions, she married Mr. Robert Thompson; a plain, practical farmer; and, instead of touring it in Italy, she went to live at the old homestead, which had been the abode of the Thompsons for generations. Dreams and reality are so very different, you see.

Robert Thompson was a working farmer as well as a practical man, and all his people worked. His mother had worked in her day, his sisters had worked, he expected his wife to work. She took to it gleefully. She had not been brought up with high notions by any means, and at first the work did not seem so much. But every experienced lady knows how the labor seems to accumulate in a plain farmer's household, as the years after marriage roll on. There were plenty of men and boys about, but only one woman-servant was kept, and Mrs. Robert Thompson grew to find that she helped at nearly everything save, perhaps, the very roughest of the labor. Instead of lounging in elegant foreign studios, or gilding down famed canals and streams in picturesque gondolas, she had butter and cheese to make, and poultry to rear, and dinners to cook in the long, low-ceiled kitchen, and the thousand and one cares upon her shoulders that go to make up a busy household. Quite a contrast, as must be admitted.

With things a little different, she would not have minded the work so much; could she have had nice carpets and tasteful furniture, and books and a picture or two, and flowers.—The home was an hard and practical, and its surroundings were getting so shabby. At first she had not noticed this, nor cared for it; but every year, as the years went on, made matters look direr. Old Mrs. Thompson had not cared to be smart and nice; Robert never thought about it. And what though he had? It is only natural for men to assume that what had done for a mother would do for a wife.

In time, Mrs. Robert Thompson began to ask that some renovation should take place, at which Robert only stared; the house that had done without painting so long, could do yet, and the old things in it were good enough for them. She did not venture to urge the point, but she did press for some flowers. There was a strip of ground under the south parlor windows where a shrub of sweet-brier grew, and pinks, sweet-williams, and marigolds blossomed in their season. But they were old-fashioned, common flowers, and she pleaded, in vain, for rare and elegant plants she had seen in conservatories and public gardens. But Robert Thompson would as soon have thought of buying the moon, as such useless things as flowers. The garden, like himself, was all practical, filled with cabbages, onions, potatoes and sweet herbs.—And so went on her unlovely existence, in which dissatisfaction was becoming a night-mare.

Now and again, on those somewhat rare occasions, when she went out to her neighbors and saw how pretty many of them had things, she came home more than ever out of heart.—The worst was (or the best, there was no real reason why a little money should not be spent in making the home happier and prettier for Robert Thompson) was "doing well," and putting fifty by. But "well-to-do" had not come into the man, and his wife was too much; perhaps too constitutionally timid, to make trouble over it.

The matter to-day, which had put her so very much out, was this: A sewing club had recently been established in the neighborhood. There was much distress among the poor laborers' wives and families, and a few ladies, with time on their hands, set up a sewing club, to make a few clothes for the nearly naked children. The farmers' wives had joined it, Mrs. Thompson among others. They met at stated intervals, taking the different houses in rotation; dining at one o'clock, and working steadily for several hours. It was surprising how much work was accomplished, how many little petticoats and frocks were made in the long afternoons. In less than a month it would be Mrs. Thompson's turn to receive the company—for the first time—and she naturally began to consider ways and means. For they met for an entertainment as well as for sewing—tea in the afternoon; a grand meal later, when the stitching was over.

What was Mrs. Thompson to do? Their stock of plates and dishes consisted of a few odds and ends of cracked delf, that had once been a kind of mulberry color. She had long wanted some new white-ware; she wanted more than ever now. Grover, the keeper of the village crockery-shop, had a lovely set for sale, white, with a delicate sprig of convolvuli and fuschias, looking every bit as good as real china. Mrs. Thompson had set her heart on that set, and that morning she had broached the subject to her husband.

"What is the matter with the old ones?" asked he.

"Look at them," she answered.—"They are frightfully old and shabby."

"I dare say the food will taste as well off them as off Grover's set of white-ware."

"But; there is not half enough. We have as good as none left."

"Mother had some best china.—Where is it?"

"That is nearly all gone. We could not put the two on the table together."

"Why not?"

"O, Robert! look at this. It is the shabbiest old lot ever seen.

"It was good enough for mother," Mrs. Robert Thompson disdained comment.

"You would not have thought of this but for the sewing-circle having to come here. If they cannot come here and eat from such dishes as we have got, they are welcome to stay away."

There were tears in Mrs. Thompson's eyes; but she crowded them bravely back. He took his hat to go out to his mowing.

"We really want the things, Robert. Those at Grover's are very cheap. I can get all I want for a mere trifle. Do give me the money."

"Grover'll have too keep 'em, for us. I've got no money to waste on fine china," returned the farmer. "By the way," looking back from the door, "Jones and Lee are coming to give me a helping hand. I want to get the south meadow down to-day if I can—it's a famous heavy crop; so I shall bring them into dinner. Oh, and the Hubbards want six pounds of butter to-night; don't forget to have it ready."

With these words, Mr. Robert Thompson had marched off, leaving his wife to her long, weary day's work, darkened and made distasteful by her disappointment. She was both grieved and angry. It was a little thing, perhaps, but it is the little things of life that delight or annoy.

Existence seemed very bare and homely to Jane Thompson that summer day. With her love of ease, and beauty, and symmetry, how rude, and coarse, and hard, looked all her surroundings. It was only one long, monotonous round of homely toil, unrelieved by any of the little sweetnesses and graces that might make even toil pleasant. She did not often think of it; but she remembered that day, with the faintest little air of regret, that she might have been far differently situated, and she looked through the pretty French cottage on the hill, embowered in a perfect forest of blossoming vines, and caught the cool gleam of urn and fountain, something very like a sigh trembled on her lips. "Squire Burnham's wife does not have to beg for a paltry sum of money to set out her table decently," she thought, rebelliously.

And then, in her spirit of aggrievement, she mentally went over the other things she needed, and that Robert knew were needed. Why was life to be all toil and bare ugliness? There was no reason; he had plenty of money. A new carpet for the best parlor; paper for the walls, so stained with time; whitewash; paint; some fresh chintz; she remembered it all, as she toiled through the long, sultry forenoon, with an aching head and discouraged heart. It happened to be washing day; and on those days she took all the work, that Molly might not be disturbed in her help at the tubs.

What business had she to marry Robert Thompson? she asked herself, her slender wrists beating away at the butter for the Hubbards. For in the green and gloomy light that Mrs. Robert Thompson looked at things to-day, she quite forgot the fact that she had fallen in love with the honest, steady, and good-looking young farmer, choosing him in preference to Joe Burnham, whom she might have had. Joe had a patrimony of his own; two hundred a year at least, and a good bit of land, which he rented, and was called "Squire," as his father had been before him. He wanted to marry Jane Lawrence, and he would not. Likes and dislikes cannot be controlled, and she cared more for Robert Thompson's little finger than for the whole of poor under-sized Joe. Squire Burnham found another wife. And Mrs. Tompson, thus weary, was furiously envying her. Mrs. Burnham would come amid the rest of the sewing-club, too, and see the miserable shabbiness of the mulberry-ware and the home generally. The butter got beaten savagely at the thought.

Robert Thompson was not an unkind man—only thoughtless; he was a type of a very large class, more especially farmers, who do not feel the need of life's rugged pathway being softened with flowers. Absorbed in his st

"Some Pumpkins"—A single vine grown on the hillside of Hice, Imbrie & Weyand, near the edge of town, has this season produced sixteen pumpkins, all of them, with two exceptions of large size, and giving an aggregate weight of 247 lbs. We are not well enough versed in pumpkinology to determine whether there is anything remarkable in this yield or not. Perhaps some of our agricultural friends can inform us.

☞ Rally! Rally! Call and see mountains of overcoats of their own make, made up fresh this fall at S. & J. Snellenburg's, Broadway, New Brighton.

Several discharged soldiers have lately requested information of us in regard to the law passed at the last session of Congress, giving homesteads to persons in the Union service during the war. We have taken pains to investigate the matter, and have found that the law does not give every soldier a quarter of a section of land, to be disposed of at pleasure, but is only a modification of the homestead law, so that any person who had served in the army or navy of the United States in the late rebellion for the period of ninety days may enter one quarter section of land on the line of any railroad, and receive patent therefor under the homestead laws; that is, he may enter subject to all the other conditions of the homestead laws, not excepting, that he reside upon the land, one hundred and sixty acres of land held at $2.50 per acre, instead of being limited to eighty acres, as provided in the homestead laws. Soldiers who do not desire to settle upon a homestead have nothing to apply for under the new act.

Wanted—Everybody to go to Bence's new store, Quay's building, Beaver, for new style Dry Goods, Millinery, Shawls, Furs, &c., large stock and new goods. 3

Trials of a Country Editor.—The perplexities of daily journalism serves as a text to the editor of the Pottsville (Pa.) Miners Journal, who indulges in this seriman:

The scenes enacted in the "Sanctum Editorial" of a newspaper are frequently as startling as they are amusing.

Imagine editors and reporters seated at their various desks busily writing up the literary editorials on "The Situation;" copying the notes of council proceedings; fatal accidents; the general news item of the forenoon of the day, etc., and, just as all are settled and minds absorbed in their work, a man enters and inquires for somebody to whip, because a letter just inserted in his advertisement, "immediately after two ladies," enter and demand satisfaction for gross injustice did them in the morning issue. Following them, a lawyer, with a yard of manuscript, demurrs to the reporter, who has outraged his clients, by accusations of misdemeanor of which they could never be guilty. Close on his heels follows a champion billiard player, who insists that his character has been assailed by the announcement that he (Cleary) sometimes is in his game. Then comes one of those useful, good natured souls—the man about town—bearing the tidings of two broken limbs. Closely followed by a tramping jour, printer, all the way from Texas, but foot sick and sore, for quarters to procure a nights lodging.

Remember—"The Cheap Store" is on Madison street, near the Diamond, Rochester. oct12;2w

The Stray Law.—Frequent inquiries are made in reference to the mode of procedure in case of estray horses, cattle, &c. The law on the subject is in substance as follows:

Whenever a stray beast is found trespassing on the premises of any one, it is the duty of the party to give notice to the owner thereof under penalty of five dollars, if he can be found, and within four days deliver to the Town Clerk, a full description of the kind, marks, color, or any natural artificial marks of such stray or strays, together with the fees, which are for a horse, fifty cents, cattle, twenty-five cents each, sheep, six cents each. If the owner does not appear within ten days such stray shall be taken up, and settle all damages incurred, if not, it shall be the duty of the party taking up the same to cause the stray or strays to be advertised for three weeks, in at least one newspaper (which costs $4.00). And if, the owner shall not have appeared within sixty days after such advertisement and settled all reasonable costs and damages, the person taking up the said stray shall make application to a Justice of the Peace to issue his warrant to the constable, who is required to sell the same at public sale, first giving ten days' notice for such sale by at least three printed or written hand-bills. And after he shall have sold the same, he shall make return of the proceeds to said Justice, who shall, after paying all reasonable charges and costs for keeping as aforesaid, pay over the surplus, if there be any to the County Treasurer: but if the owner shall appear within one year after, such sale, and prove his property to such stray, the said Justice shall certify the same to said Treasurer, who shall pay over the whole amount of such overplus, but if the owner shall not apply within the time aforesaid he shall thereafter be debarred from recovering, and the money aforesaid may be applied to county purposes.

When John Saxton, editor of the Canton (O.) Repository, the oldest paper in Ohio, heard of the battle of Sedan, and the capture of the Emperor, he wrote and published the account of the event in a column parallel with a reprint of the account he wrote, and published in the same paper of the surrender of Napoleon at Waterloo in 1815. He is the only editor, probably, in the world who has written of the exit of both Napoleons in the same paper.

Fun Ahead.

At our election on last Tuesday, Capt. Boyle, (who used to run a canal boat) with a great deal better success than he ran the political machine in the Middle Ward, offered to present me with the best chicken he had in his flock, if we (Boyle,) also promised me the next best chicken in his flock if we got two hundred and fifty votes for Chandler in Beaver county. We got them. So, he has agreed to wheel the birds down to me on Saturday, the 22d inst., to spend with him his house at 4 o'clock p. m. [I dislaimed the New Brighton Ring, with a United States revenue officer in it. I admire his gallantry, however, for he slipped through the Ring and appointed a lady who cleaned up the office after the Captain left, and is discharging her duties faithfully and to the entire satisfaction of the public. Chas. Coale.

No. 13.—The Stars and Stripes—The Red, White and Blue—The handsomest ship in the world. The U. S. Banner—a constellation of 50 fixed of 13, will represent the number of States of the Federal Union some day; and to embellish additionally "The Star Spangled Banner."

Thomas Nelson, Jr., Francis Lightfoot Lee and Carter Braxton, in addition to the four last mentioned signers of the Declaration of Independence, were also Virginians by birth, full of patriotism, in the prime of life and vigorous. At fourteen Nelson went to England to acquire an education. After entering Cambridge College and graduating with reputation, he returned to his native land and entered into political life. He was elected to Congress in 1775, and was a zealous advocate of American freedom "by deeds, not by words." He commanded a regiment, while Patrick Henry and Thomas Lee had similar military posts at the siege of Yorktown. He headed a column of militia and bombarded even his own mansion in which British officers were then domiciled. He became Governor of Virginia, and the successor of Jefferson. He died at the age of fifty years.

Francis Lightfoot Lee, a younger brother of Richard Lee, was educated under Rev. Dr. Craig, a Scottish clergyman. Inspired by the same patriotic views as those of his brother, he was early called into publicity; and, in 1765, was elected a delegate to the House of Burgesses, where he was a colleague of Patrick Henry. He was married, and moved to Richmond, the public council seat, and continued an active and leading agent in opposing, or resisting, measures of oppression. He was a delegate to the Congress of 1775, and signed the Declaration of Independence. His health failed him during the progress of the war, and he died in April 1797, aged sixty-three.

Mr. Braxton was born September 10, 1736. He was educated at William and Mary College, and after graduating married Miss Robinson, president of Congress. In 1700 he returned, and married a beautiful wife, daughter of the Royal Receiver General of Customs in Virginia. Dabney Carr, who married Patrick Henry, delight his auditors with oratory, by marriage, as one out of the first to favor the cause of American liberty. He was present in the House of Burgesses in 1765, and there heard the resolutions and protest of Patrick Henry in reference to the Stamp Act, and boldly voted in their support. He succeeded Peyton Randolph in the Congress of 1775, and signed the Declaration the next June.

Braxton was a gentleman of cultivated mind, and respectable talents; and, although his eloquence was not so impressive as that of Henry and Lee, his oratory was easy and flowing, and his manner peculiarly agreeable. He was removed to another world by an attack of paralysis, in the 61st year of his age, the 10th Oct. 1797.

The people of the United States glory in the fact that in their country there is no religion established by law. We enjoy complete religious freedom, and it is hoped we always shall. This feature in our government has caused thousands to emigrate to the United States. We hope the day is not far distant when every government will follow our example in this respect; and then all good men will say—in the last words of the celebrated Paolo Sarpi, in speaking of his much loved country, Venice—"Esto perpetua!"

"Great God, our guardian, guide and friend!
O, still thy blest wing arm extend;
Preserved by Thee for ages past,
For ages let Thy kindness last!"

The Radical Slanders.

"Nagle is a gentleman, and approved the dirty work."—Radical, Sept. 2d.

By reference to the Pittsburgh Commercial of 10th inst., it will be seen that Mr. Quay repeats the malignant slander that I had offered D. A. Nagle, Democratic Senator elect from the 3d district of Pennsylvania, two thousand dollars to be used in defeating two Republican candidates for the Legislature from Philadelphia, at the election last week. In the Radical, in which he first made this charge he used the language quoted above. In the Commercial he says: "It is not to be expected that either of them [meaning Irwin or Nagle] would confess the conspiracy, and Nagle's letter is worth just as much as Irwin's, and no more." Leaving it to be inferred that neither of us were entitled to credence. This sudden change in Mr. Quay's view of qualifications requisite to constitute the character of a "gentleman," is only equalled by the boldness and facility with which he utters calumny.

I have been, politically and unpolitically, misrepresented and slandered by others, before in every particular, but publish a letter from D. A. Nagle of Philadelphia, in which he pronounced it a base falsehood.

I would like to be informed which two Republican candidates Mr. Quay charges me with having offered money to defeat. I do not know of a Republican candidate for Legislature in Philadelphia, at the late election, whose defeat I desired, nor any one whose success would not be gratifying to me as a member of the great Republican party, to be assured of. It would come with better grace from this wholesale libeler to name the candidates he alludes to as being the objects of a purchased defeat. I have always been a Republican; expect to continue such in the future. No combination of cliques, rings and gamblers can drive me outside its ranks. I have been fighting the Cameron clan since 1861; and they never succeeded in locating a branch of that corrupt ring in Beaver county, until after the lamentable defeat of Andrew G. Curtin, in 1867, for the United States Senate, by that prince of political blackleg, Simon Cameron—aided by his purchased tool, M. S. Quay, who so mysteriously went over from Curtin to Cameron during that memorable contest.

The Hon. Thos. Nicholson was so struck by this political turpitude that he said to me—just subsequent to the occurrence—"M. S. Quay will never be able to satisfy the people of Beaver county as to the rectitude of his conduct in the sudden transfer of his support from Curtin to Cameron."

[Just here—Saturday Oct. 15th, 10 p.m. I am very agreeably interrupted by a serenade from the Cornet Band of New Brighton, led by Capt. C. F. Winter, "which discovered music in such sweet strains——" well, there's no use trying; I don't remember the quotation, and am no musical critic; so, boys, if I fell flat, please fully pay high appreciation of the excellence of your music and the compliment intended, attribute it to lack of terms in which to express myself.]

In reference to the charge that I offered Mr. Nagle money to defeat Republican candidates in Philadelphia, I take an extract from a letter of that gentleman, showing the estimation in which Mr. Quay's veracity is held abroad. He says:

"I have had no conversation with the editor of the Beaver Radical, nor with any other person wherein your name has been mentioned in regard to any matter relating to what has been published in that paper. I think you go out of your way when you notice what that editor publishes, in so doing, you give an importance to his articles they would not otherwise obtain. You should, by this time, know the little weight the public attach to anything which appears in that paper. The editor's declaration that he can be qualified in a Court of justice to the truths of his statements will have little weight. He was sufficiently qualified in his late libel suit against the editor of the Pittsburgh Commercial, to convict all who read his testimony of how much weight should be attached to the utterances by the people of this Commonwealth."

Lawrence county should have given Capt. Donley, Republican candidate for Congress at the late election, (small majority, the vote at least fifteen hundred majority,) Beaver county should have given him between six hundred and seven hundred majority, and Washington County ought to have given him the party vote. Had this been done this district would have been represented in the next Congress by a sound and able Republican. What was it not done? Republican votes were needed to secure the election of Dr. Sherlock. Quay knew that his candidate for the Legislature was objectionable to the Republicans of Beaver county; but his nomination had been effected by a fraud, and, that his election could only be secured through the use of similar means; therefore Capt. Donley must be, and was, sacrificed in Beaver and Washington counties to accomplish that end. No man knows better than Mr. Quay how this result was brought about.

We have had five solicitors of Congress in the Western Districts of Pennsylvania at the late election. Why is it that such is the result? It is said Simon Cameron collected from the National office-holders and clerks in Washington city from this State, a vast sum of money for the purpose of aiding in the late campaign in Pennsylvania. What has become of this money? We have said neither President nor a Governor to place, any State office at large. It is shrewdly suggested that the money is held up as a bribery fund to secure the control of the

SELECT MISCELLANY.

How He Was Tamed.

"Dear me! dear me! dear, dear me!" said Aunt Eunice Elsley, as she took off her spectacles and mournfully rubbed the glasses. "To think Harvey, that you should ever come to this."

"Humph!" was Mrs. Jameson's only remark—brief, but wonderfully suggestive; while Harvey Elsley groaned mildly.

He was sitting in a cushioned arm-chair, his feet in a tub of warm water, and his eyes fixed on a thermometer that hung on the wall close by, while his mouth, drawn decidedly down at the corners, and three parallel lines on his forehead indicated a temperament considerably below zero, if such an expression may be considered allowable.

"And you think you are going to die?" said Aunt Eunice sympathetically.

"I don't believe I can be mistaken in the symptoms," groaned Mr. Elsley.

"Symptoms, indeed!" broke in Mrs. Jameson—she was Harvey Elsley's widowed sister, and living with him for the double purpose of crossing him and contradicting him—"he ha'n't no more sy'mptoms than other folks has."

"Harvey shook his head in the direction of his Aunt Eunice.

"Humph!" once again exclaimed Mrs. Jameson.

"And now, if I was you," added Aunt Eunice, "I'd try to sleep a little. Sleep's dreadful good for the nerves—and the room'll be very quiet while Matilda and I are lookin' after the dinner."

"I thirst," said Mr. Elsley resignedly; "but I can't contend with my poor shattered constitution."

Mrs Jameson flounced out of the room; Aunt Eunice followed more soberly.

"Aunt I'm astonished at you!" Mrs. Jameson burst out. "When you know perfectly well it's all his own ridiculous notions."

"And I'm astonished at you, Matildy!" said the elder lady serenely. "I guess you've forgotten the days when you was a gal, and used to paddle on the bay."

"No I haven't" said Mrs. Jameson wonderingly. "Why?"

"Because I should think you'd remember how much easier 'tis to float with the tide than against it."

"Oh!" said Mrs. Jameson, as if she but half comprehended, after all. But he is so trying."

"I haven't a doubt of it," said Aunt Eunice. "I'm going to take him home with me."

"But Aunt Eunice you don't know him, he'll worry you to death."

"I guess not," said Aunt Eunice sagely.

"But you'll repent it, Aunt, see if you don't," said Mrs. Jameson.

"La, child!" said the spectacled philosophress. "Sickness ain't nothin' but a notion, half the time. Medicine cures it sometimes, and sometimes it's something else. I've a kind of fancy to try my hand at doctorin'."

"I'm sure I've no objection," said Mrs. Jameson heartily.

"I don't know about going," said Mr. Harvey Elsley dubiously when the plan was broached to him. "I'm a poor traveler—always was—and I should hate dreadfully to die away from home."

"But you won't," said Aunt Eunice. "Playsdell is an awful wholesome place, and the change of air'll do you good."

"Is there a good medical man in Playsdell?"

"Two or three of 'em."

And Mr. Elsley allowed himself to be persuaded.

Dear Aunt Eunice! she showed herself to be a gem among nurses. So different, thought the gratified Harvey, from Matilda Jameson, who scoffed at his ailments, and made light of his groans. Did he ever complain of a headache, Aunt Eunice rained camphor and cologne over him, parboiled his feet in scalding water, and ransacked the whole pharmacopœia for prescriptions; did he get rheumatic, she plastered him from head to foot with mustard, cabbage leaves and hops; was he threatened with a trifle of indigestion, she kept him for twenty-four hours on Graham bread, cold tea and wheaten grits. In short, she humored him to the top of his bent; and at first Harvey Elsley regarded the whole place as a sort of an earthly paradise.

But it began to grow monotonous after a while. Aunt Eunice was too ready in her acquiescence, too eager in the application of her remedies. Harvey began to miss the truer spirit of Matilda Jameson's wholesome contradictions.

"I don't feel quite so well this morning, Aunt Eunice," he said one day.

"I knowed it," said Aunt Eunice, with a sympathetic groan. "Your poor eyes look as if they was boiled, and there's a dreadful greenish color in your complexion. Dear—dear—if you was to die!"

"But I don't feel as bad as all that," said Mr. Elsley, a little startled.

"I know," sighed Mrs. Elsley. "Your heart beats kind o' uneven, don't it? And the palms of your hands feel sweaty? Yes, yes, I just knowed it. That's just the way Hezekiah Morse was took, and he didn't live twenty-four hours."

"Pshaw!" said Harvey, but his voice was a little tremulous nevertheless. "I'm well enough."

"You think you be, and so did Hezekiah Morse! Ah dear, life is dreadful onsartin, and we can't none of us calculate!"

"I—I guess I'll go and take a little walk," observed the invalid.

"I wouldn't," said Aunt Eunice, sepulchrally. "Hezekiah Morse——"

But Harvey on! too glad to escape from the name of the doomed Hezekiah, caught his hat off the table and bolted out of the room, leaving his Aunt's sentence half spoken.

"Here's Rachel Heath coming in the gate," said Aunt Eunice, her spectacles appearing like twin moons at the window. "Rachel, you'd better walk a little ways with my nephew. If he should drop down dead afore he comes back, it would be some consolation for you to be there to bring me the melancholy news."

Rachel, a blooming lass of eighteen peach-cheeked summers, looked rather tiddly at the charge, although she accepted her mission without remonstrance.

"Are you so very ill?" she asked wistfully.

"N—n—yes, stammered our hero, divided between his disgust of Aunt Eunice's hospitable treatment, and a desire of still retaining the eclat of some hopeless ailment. "I'm not so well as I could wish, Miss Rachel. A damp morning!"

"Why," cried Rachel, "it's lovely this morning."

"We're going to have rain."

"Not a drop," said Rachel cheerily. She was a bright-eyed, brown-dressed girl, with red lips and a voice like a lark. And somehow Harvey Elsley felt the invigorating influence of her mere presence, as she tripped along at his side.

"I wish Matilda was like her," he said to himself.

"Don't you think," asked Mr. Elsley lugubriously, "it would be pleasant in the cemetery?"

"What an idea!" cried Rachel, opening wide her blue eyes. "No, no, Mr. Elsley; I know a much prettier walk, down by a pretty old ruined mill."

And Rachel took him there, refusing to listen to another word about the cemetery.

"M-i-h-h!" said Aunt Eunice: "you're feverish. I'll make some milk toast directly."

"Bother the milk toast," said her ungrateful patient, sniffing the savory odor of roast duck and green peas which arose from the kitchen.

"I won't be fed on spoon meat any longer. He knows I am!"

"Rachel's only a child," said Aunt Eunice, with a curious sound, which might be either a groan or a laugh. "Children know things by instinct," asserted Mr. Harvey Elsley. And he set a dismal, which would have astonished Matilda Jameson, and actually smoked a cigar after it, like any other man.

It was not until he had lighted his candle to go to bed, that he suddenly stopped short, and stared wildly around, as if bethinking himself.

"Is it a pain?" asked Aunt Eunice.

"Under your left shoulder-blade, or in your side?"

"No, no, cried Harvey. "But I forgot it."

"Forgot what?" demanded Aunt Eunice.

"My chill. It's the ultimate thing the one I always have my chill on."

"Dear, dear!" said Aunt Eunice. "But there isn't time to have it to-night."

"I'm afraid not;" said Mr. Elsley, and he went to bed, as it were, without his supper of arrowroot.

Aunt Eunice laughed until her plump form shook like a mould of jelly, after the door was safely shut.

"He'll do well enough now," quoth she to herself. "I must have Rachel here again to-morrow."

A month afterward Mrs. Jameson came to Playsdell.

"I didn't hear anything from you, Aunt Eunice," said she, "and I felt somehow worried."

"I'm glad you came," said Mrs. Elsley. "I was just going to write to you."

"Is he dead?" asked Matilda, looking apprehensively toward Harvey's old hat, which hung back of the door.

"No; but he's going to be married," said Aunt Eunice. "Little Rachel Heath has cured him; and now she's going to marry him, to complete the business."

And that was the last Mrs. Jameson ever heard of her brother's ailments.

"But how did it ever happen, Aunt Eunice?" asked Matilda confidentially.

"My dear," answered the old lady, "it was all management. If he pretended, I grouned as much louder that he was forced to leave off in self-defence. If he thought he was worse I declared I was sure he was dying. And just when he was beginning to be heartily sick of sickness, along came Rachel with her contagious joyousness and good-humor, and that was the finishing touch. Didn't I tell you I should cure him here?"

"I didn't think it was a possible thing," said Matilda Jameson.

Mrs. E. A. Pollard a Lunatic.

Mrs. E. A. Pollard, a lady who has acquired a liberal share of notoriety during the last three or four years, and who has latterly resided in this city, was a few days since placed in an asylum for the insane. It will be remembered that about two years ago she was a conspicuous actor in a somewhat tragical scene in Baltimore. The part she played was that of shooting, though not fatally, a lawyer of that city, for refusing to inform her of the whereabouts of her husband. Soon after she came to Washington, and announced herself as the proprietress of the St. Cloud Hotel. This establishment is on the corner of F and Ninth streets. It is owned by a Mr. Lyons, of N. Y. Formerly it was the Herndon House, and under that name was a most unlovitting and dilapidated concern. It is the house in which Mrs. Surratt and Payne had their interviews prior to the consumation of the conspiracy that resulted in the assassination of President Lincoln. But the owner, by a judicious outlay of capital, greatly improved its appearance, and transformed it into a cheerful looking and inviting hotel. He fitted it up without limit as to expense, and installed Mrs. Pollard as the manageress. To all outward appearance she was the lessee. She advertised her own name, and when there was a housewarming for the entertainment of the Press gang, she presided at the feast. But happens that Mr. Lyons, and not Mrs. Pollard, was the real man of the house. The lady was the attraction that was to give it fame and popularity, and for this service she was to receive a per cent. of the profits. She was more in the ornamental than in the useful role. Her prerogative was not to superintend the flavoring of the soup, but to enjoy all the good things the house afforded, and to patronize the excursions, shooting-feats, and the like. The steamer Lady of the Lake, with Captain Joe Denty for skipper, was her favorite, and this unfortunate preference brought about a deal of trouble; for it appears that it raised the green-eyed monster in Mr. Lyons, though it is not accurately set forth what right he had to be jealous of Mrs. Pollard, inasmuch as Mrs. Lyons would cheerfully have counseled him to avoid any jealousy on account of the conduct-ness of the St. Cloud. Nevertheless he was jealous, and he laid a trap for Denty, and Denty fell into it—so the story goes—and they met and they fought with fists, and the scandal was printed in a New York paper, and the lady went mad, and this is the ending of an eventful career, the closing of which is hardly more sad than the progress. She is now safe from temptation at least, and those gentle charities that inspire commiseration may be invoked in her behalf.

The Story of a Faithful Horse.

Many years ago there lived on the banks of the Brandywine, in the State of Pennsylvania, an old Quaker gentleman, who possessed an old and faithful servant. This servant was a horse, and his name was Charley. Now, Charley had trotted before the family chaise for many a long year to the village post-office, to the Sabbath day meeting, and upon all kinds of errands. Old Charley was ever ready to be "hitched up." Not one trick had he shown, nor had he once proved unfaithful, and grandfather always rode him with such strength or lightness as he might have about his arm. The river divided the farm, and it was at times necessary to visit the lot on the other side; there was a bridge a mile and a half from the house, but there was a good ford just down by the bank, which was always when the river was low. One day in the spring time grandfather had to go over the river, but the freshet had come, the banks were overflowed and the ice in great cakes and fields was coming down with a rush, so he mounted old Charley and set off by way of the bridge. Arriving safely on the other side, he spent some time in the business which had brought him over, and it was nearly sundown when he got ready to go home. He looked up toward the bridge, and said it was a long three miles around, and that he believed he would try the ford. Old Charley can swim," he said as he rode down to the bank of the stream, "and it is but a short way over." Charley looked reluctant, but after considerable urging he entered the stream. In a moment he was striking out bravely for the opposite shore, but in another moment a great cake of ice came pounding along, overwhelming both man and horse. They both rose, but grandfather had lost his seat; but as he was swept along by the powerful current, he caught the drooping branch of a large sycamore tree, and was soon safe from immediate danger. The ridderless horse pursued his journey towards the house, and soon reached the shore. Here, appearing to miss his familiar friend, he looked around and as it seems discovered his master clinging to the branch of the tree; immediately, and without hesitation, he turned around and swam boldly for the tree, and beneath the branch he stopped, and permitted my grandfather to get on his back, and then, almost quite exhausted, started at once for home. The whole scene had been witnessed by the family, and as Charley neared the shore, with loads to meet him, nearly famished, some, he was caught by the bridle, when, near the shore, and the old gentleman removed from his perilous position.

Running the Gantry.

At the corner of Penn and Wylie streets century a young man made his appearance in Stratford, and remained for two weeks or three weeks on the rivers which then existed to afford shelter to stage coach travelers. Where he came from what his business was no one could guess. Opposite the tavern stood a small cottage, and there at a blacksmith named Folsom. He had a daughter who was the beauty of the village, and it was her fortune to captivate the heart of the young stranger, who had his love, and he won from Stratford and was traveling incognito, but in confidence gave his real name, and said he was heir to a large fortune. She rather liked him, and they were married.

A few weeks after their marriage, he told his wife he must visit New Orleans; he did so, and the gossips of the town made the young stranger unhappy by their hints and jeers. Ll—— for months the husband mourned, but before a week had elapsed he received a large budget of letters, and told his wife that he must return to England and go along. He took his departure, and the gossips had another glorious opportunity to make a confiding woman wretched. To all but herself it was a clear case of desertion. The wife became a mother and, for two years, lived on in hope. At the end of that time the Stratford beauty received a letter from her husband directing her to go at once to New York, and to take nothing with her but the clothes she wore, and embark in a ship for her home in England.

On arriving in New York city she found a ship splendidly furnished with every convenience and luxury, for her comfort, and two servants ready to obey her every wish. The ship duly arrived in England, and the Stratford girl became a noble mistress of a superb mansion, and as the wife of a baronet, was entitled by the aristocracy as Lady Eleanor Sterling.

On the death of her husband, many years ago, the Stratford boy succeeded to the title and wealth of his father, and in the last edition of the "Peerage and Baronetage" he is spoken of as the issue of "Miss Folsome of Stratford, North America."

When the late Prof. Stillman visited England, some years since he had the pleasure of meeting Lady Sterling at a dinner party, and was delighted to answer her many questions about her birth place in Connecticut.—Nation.

A Wife for a Welsh.

On Saturday evening, says the Cleveland Herald, a most extraordinary bargain was made in Painesville the parties to the contract being two men both probably under the influence of liquor, and the articles exchanged being a wife for a watch. The names of the parties are Thaddeus Miller and Jim Gregory. Miller is married, Gregory is not, but he had a silver watch, of no very great intrinsic value, but which Miller coveted. The two men met on Saturday in a barber shop, as before stated, somewhat under the influence of strong drink. After some conversation, the subject of the watch was taken up, and one proposed—which one we are not informed—that the chronometer should be exchanged for Mrs. Miller.

Whether or not the proposition was made in earnest, it was taken up, and an agreement made to carry out the terms. Subsequently the watch was delivered to Miller, who went home, and at about two o'clock on Sunday morning Gregory appeared at Miller's house and demanded the fulfilment of the contract. Miller either half become sober, and repenting of his bargain, intended to punish such an impudent demand, or else he was sufficiently intoxicated to be furious at any such request. Whichever was the case, he thoroughly loaded a shot-gun, leveled it at Gregory's head, and shot through the window at him. No less than eighteen large shots were lodged squarely in the unsuspecting Gregory's face; both his eyes were put out and his whole countenance was shockingly disfigured. It is thought that the wounds must prove fatal. Sunday forenoon Miller gave himself up to the authorities, and his examination before a magistrate was appointed for this forenoon.

Unused Powers.

We seldom hear a better sermon on the duty of preparing for the "bourne whence no traveler returns" than is contained in the allegory which states that a man once fell through this world into the next. There he discovered that we retain those parts of ourselves, and those only, which we have assiduously used here. Curious was the spectacle presented to his wondering sight. He saw hundreds of hungry-looking ears. They were forever congregating and hurrying hither and thither. He was informed that on earth these had done the hearing of church music and church sermons; had cultivated the listening faculty, and nothing else, so that they were now ears, and nothing more. He noticed big stomachs lying about contentedly under fences and trees, and was told that these were persons who had chiefly used their gastronomic powers—who had assiduously guzzled at saloons, and gormandized at restaurants. He became interested in some large dolls, with complexions like pale ales, too, that appeared to move their eyelids languidly, and sometimes to issue. These he learned were what remained of ladies who had cultivated only good looks. On inquiring for a popular preacher, he was conducted to a place full of ears; where a lively skeleton, without a vestige of heart or brain, was still gesticulating impressively. Upon making this discovery the man immediately telegraphed earthward as follows: "I find that powers unused die out; that parts neglected fall away; that we are allowed only to keep so much of ourselves as we use. Look out that you do not end as a restless ear, as a lazy stomach, or as a pig tail of wind."

Nothing Like Grammar.

Nothing like grammar! Better without a cow than go without that. There are numberless "professors" who go "tramp tramp, peddling a weak article, by which in twenty days they guarantee to set a man thoroughly up in the English language. An instance in point comes from Greenville, Alabama, where a "professor had labored with the youth of that people, and taught them to dote on grammar accordingly to Morris's system. During one of the lectures the sentence, "Mary milks the cow," was given out to be parsed. Each word had been parsed save one, which fell to Bob ——, a sixteen year old near the foot of the class, who commenced thus: "Cow, is a noun, feminine gender, singular number, third person, and stands for Mary." "Stands for Mary?" said the amused professor; "How do you make that out?" "Because," answered the noble youth, "if the cow didn't stand for Mary how could Mary milk her?"

"I WENT to bathe," said a Yankee. But before I was long in the water saw a huge double-jawed shark making rapidly toward me. What was to be done? When he was within a yard of me, I faced round, dived under the shark, and taking a knife from my pocket, ripped the monster up.

"But did you bathe with your clothes on?" asked the astonished listener.

"Well," answered the story teller, reproachfully, "well, I do think you needn't be so particular particular."

—It is said that there are more cigars manufactured in Northampton than in any other county in the State.

—Andrew Clark, of Townsville, Crawford county, while returning from a squirrel hunt, in climbing a fence he accidently discharged his gun into his face midway between his chin and his ear. His gun was so close to his body that his clothes took fire and burned his body in a most shocking manner. He died in less than an hour from the time of the accident.

—On the 1st inst. Mr. Watt Patterson, of Unity, shot an owl at 'lock No. 1, on the canal, four feet eleven inches from tip to tip of wings. And on the same day, Mr. Arthy Davis, Jr., shot a hawk in Upton tp. measuring four feet and five inches from tip to tip of wings. These are the largest birds of their kinds ever shot in this neighborhood.—Lawrence Journal.

—On Thursday of last week, a wild cat entered the house of Mr. Elliott Walters who resides at Wilson's mill, on Toby Creek in Knox township, about two miles north of this place, and took a young child from the cradle, and was about to commence devouring it, when it was frightened away. The parents had gone out to gather potatoes from a lot and left the baby wrapped up, sleeping in its cradle. A little girl was sent in after a short time, to see about the child and when she opened the door, was horrified to see a large wild cat, with the infant, behind the stove. The little thing was crying piteously, and in a short time would doubtless have been killed and devoured by the savage beast. On the alarm being given, the wild cat escaped through the window, and has since been seen in that neighborhood.—Clarion Democrat.

NAPOLEON III.

Alleged Attempt at Suicide of the Emperor.

The Press, published at Vienna, gives the following extraordinary piece of correspondence from Cassels:

"The Prussian Government has issued the strenest prohibition against the receipt at the telegraph office of a report of the circumstances which I shall now relate to you from authentic sources. In spite of all attempts at concealment, yesterday the news spread like wildfire that Napoleon had, on the 18th, made an attempt at suicide. The details of the affair, as communicated by the officer on guard, are as follows: Napoleon, for two days, exhibited a strange elevation of spirits, which up to this had not been perceptible in him. He received, during the last few days, several dispatches and letters from Paris and Hastings, spoke extremely little, and for the two days left his room only once. This was about five o'clock in the evening. He had given orders that all dispatches which arrived should be brought to him immediately, wherever he was. Two, which had just come from Hastings and Brussels, were accordingly taken to him in the park. He read them, and grew visibly pale. He then returned to the castle, and shut himself up in his room. After they had seen or heard nothing of him for two hours, his immediate attendants began to be alarmed. About half past nine o'clock they resolved, on the pretext of having something important to communicate, to ask for admission into his room. Prince Murat undertook the task, but to his repeated knocks and calls no answer was returned. After half an hour they broke open the door, and found Napoleon lying on the sofa in a deep faint. Two physicians were immediately fetched, and they succeeded, after the lapse of an hour, in bringing Napoleon to himself. Everything here points to an attempt at suicide, to which, of course, the officials will not agree. The Governor of Cassel made his appearance at a still later hour in the castle, which was in a state of the greatest confusion. The Governor did not leave till morning, and has sent a long account of the matter to the headquarters. The whole population of Cassel went out to-day to Wilhelmshoehe to see Napoleon. He, however, in consequence of severe illness, kept his room. The Press evidently, and it would appear with reason, disbelieves the whole story. It remarks that, after Sedan, there is scarcely any news which could effect the Emperor so severely.

—The belt of land around the globe five hundred miles north and five hundred miles south of the equator, abounds in trees producing the gum of India rubber. They can be tapped, it is stated, for twenty successive seasons without injury; and the trees stand so close that one man can gather the sap of eighty in a day, each tree yielding, on an average, three tablespoonfuls daily. Forty-three thousand of these trees have been counted in a tract of country thirty miles long by eight wide. There are in Amazonia and Europe more than one hundred and fifty manufactories of India rubber articles, employing some five hundred operatives each, and consuming more than ten million pounds of the gum per year, and the business is considered to be still in its infancy. But to whatever extent it may increase, there will still be plenty of rubber to supply the demand.

—A little girl and her brother were on their way to the store one winter morning. The grass on the common was white with the frost, and the wind was very damp. They were both poorly dressed, but the little girl had a kind of a cloak over her which she seemed to have outgrown.

As they walked briskly along, she drew the boy closer to her and said: "Come under my cost, Johnny."

"It isn't big enough for both, sister."

"Then I'll try and stretch it a little," and they were soon as close together and as wind as birds in the same nest.

Now why, can't we all stretch our cloaks a little? There are many shivering bodies, and sad hearts, and weeping eyes in the world, just because people do not stretch their efforts beyond themselves.

—Last Saturday night the flouring mill of Mr. James Walker, on the Reading turnpike, near Harrisburg, was entered and robbed of a quantity of flour, including 400 to 500 pounds in sacks, and 300 to 400 pounds in barrels. The thieves succeeded in carrying off their plunder without detection.
